THE MUSIC LESSON

"OINK!" squealed Peter Piglet. "Oink! Oink!"

"Be quiet!" Robert Rooster shouted.

"Shush, up, Peter!" yelled Danny Donkey.

Shirley Sheep screamed to the rest of the barnyard, "Will somebody please quiet that noisy piglet?"

Then the rooster and the donkey and the sheep and everybody in the barnyard turned on Peter Piglet, hollering: "Quit making that noise, will you, pest?"

Peter thought to himself, "What a bad-tempered bunch of animals they are, to be sure!" But aloud, he just repeated, "Oink!"

Now, even the old cow, Carlotta, who hardly ever lost her patience, asked the piglet wearily, "Must you keep squealing all the time?"

"I . . . oink . . . can't help it . . . oink," answered Peter. "My mommy wants me to practice so I can be a contestant in the National Singing Contest for pigs."

"You! In a singing contest!" All the animals burst out laughing. And then Danny Donkey snickered, "Yeah, Peter Piglet will star in that beautiful opera called 'Oink Oink Oink'!" And everybody laughed all the harder.

Peter's mommy came hurrying over to him. "Don't you pay any attention to these mean animals," she said. "You go right ahead and practice your scales. Someday they'll be sorry that they treated you this way."

So the little piglet kept on oinking and oinking and the other animals kept on teasing and teasing him. Pretty soon his 'Oink' began to get less and less squealy; it began to get more and more mellow. His long hours of practice were helping; his singing voice was improving. But although, to himself and his mommy his 'oink' sounded lovely, to the other animals it still sounded like the same, old, terrible noise. They kept right on shouting at Peter whenever he tried to practice: "Quiet!" . . . "Be still!"

But Peter ignored them, and kept reminding himself of what his mommy had told him. "They'll be sorry someday."

At last the great day arrived. It was time for Peter Piglet to sing in the National Singing Contest for pigs. He and his mommy journeyed to the city of Forest Center. There, on a wide stage in front of thousands of other contestants, Peter tried out for first prize. "Oink!" he sang in his most melodious tone. "Oink! Oink!"

He knew as soon as the audience applauded that he was going to win! They clapped and clapped, and someone threw a bouquet of flowers up on the stage to congratulate him.

"Peter Piglet," said the Contest Manager, as he solemnly shook Peter's hand, "You have won first prize. Here it is." And handed Peter a microphone attached to a strange-looking machine.

"What is it?" squeaked Peter.

"A recording machine. You can make recordings of your prize song with it and have a record that you can keep forever, so that you will never forget this wonderful moment."

Holding the microphone, and watching the machine as it recorded his voice, Peter sang, "Oink! Oink! Oink!" until he had recorded his entire prize-winning song.

That evening he returned to the barnyard. The news had already reached his friends and they were all very happy for him. Then the piglet remembered his prize. He made records of his songs so that all the animals could see how it was done. Then he gave each animal a record.

So Robert Rooster and Danny Donkey and Shirley Sheep and each of the other barnyard animals had a record of his own, and, since Peter Piglet was a famous singer by now, they were all very proud.

And, of course, Peter Piglet was proud because his records were so graciously accepted by all the animals who had at one time complained about his singing. It didn't even matter that not one animal in the whole barnyard had a record player to play the record on! All that mattered was that Peter could "Oink" whenever he wanted to, and no one minded; Peter's "Oink" was music to their ears!
